Deena is a former BigLaw and Fortune 500 defense lawyer who spent the last five of her defense years working for excess carriers, primarily on trucking and medical malpractice cases. Many of her cases came in late stages of discovery, or even weeks from a trial, with a pending demand well into eight figures or more. Though she enjoyed some great results for her clients, her victories for the insurance companies felt hollow.

In 2019, Deena opened her own firm and changed her focus to representing plaintiffs in trucking, wrongful death, and employment discrimination cases. That's when she found her people and her calling. She is based in New Mexico but works with co-counsel in several states both as local counsel and as an additional team member for case prep and trial. She uses her deep experience with how companies work and how decisions get made to maximize the value of cases against large corporate defendants. She loves a good Rule 30(b)(6) deposition. She is available to consult with anyone who needs fresh eyes on a case with complex discovery, e-discovery, expert issues, or an upcoming mediation or trial.

Outside of the law, Deena is an avid skier, scuba diver, and nature photographer – all things she loves doing with her husband Robert and her two teenage children.
